Winter isn't the most popular season for running in the U.S. given that most of the northern states are covered in snow and fending off freezing temperatures during December, January, and February. But that doesn't mean that there aren't plenty of races to get you out of the cold and into your running shoes.

So whether you want to add on a half marathon to a beach vacation or ditch the snow for a quick trip to the desert, we've got the perfect list of winter half marathons for you.

Take a look at this incredible list of races scheduled from December 1, 2025 through February 28, 2026, and then get training, because winter is right around the corner.

Like Texas, Florida also offers an ample buffet of flat half marathons to choose from. Unless you're running up an overpass or over a bridge, it's nearly impossible to find much of an incline in the Sunshine State. Key West's half is easily one of the state's most beautiful, though, which sends runners out and back around the tip of the Floridian archipelago. You'll run along the coastline and through the island's historic main drag in two directions before finishing on the northside of the island.

At the very southern tip of Florida lie the Florida Keys, a chain of islands that stretch out into the Caribbean Sea. The last in the string is Key West, a tiny four-mile-long island with water stretching out on all sides. The Key West Half is an out-and-back course that traces three sides of the island and provides runners with sunrise views from across the Atlantic. Celebrate with some key lime pie!

The Year's Best Half Marathons

Key West Half-Marathon

The half marathon may be the perfect destination race. Running 13.1 miles is a travel-worthy goal that earns you a medal to wear proudly. But it doesn't wreck you like a marathon can, so you'll have energy to enjoy your post-race brunch and a little sightseeing. We debriefed race directors and veteran participants to come up with these 13 prime destinations. Happy travels! # Text by A.C. Shilton

Key West, Florida - January 18, 2015

Key West may be known more for marathon drinking sessions than for running, but the town's half marathon is trying to change all that—or at least combine the two. Starting in Old Town Key West, you'll pass Mallory Square, the Hemingway Home, and the famous Green Parrot Bar before embarking on a mostly coastal trek around the island (above). The event is especially known for its devoted—and spirited—volunteers, many of whom return yearly to support the 3,000-person race.

Why Run It: More than half of the flat, out-and-back course runs on the Florida Keys Overseas Heritage Trail, directly overlooking the aqua blue Atlantic Ocean. In pure Key West fashion, packet pickup and the race expo take place inside the Half Shell Raw Bar, one of the island's most popular seafood spots. You'll want to stop back in after the race—it's within walking distance of the finish—to celebrate with a plate of chilled oysters and a cocktail (or two).

Key West Half Marathon
United States (Florida)

Key West is right at the end of the Florida Keys, a breathtaking outcrop. It may be part of the tropical paradise zone, but - since the sun is high in the middle of winter - the temperature should be perfect for you. If you can't get a flight to Key West International Airport, fly to Miami International Airport and drive down the scenic highway, which takes about three hours. Without a doubt the best winter half marathons in the USA, Key West has a strong history and a charming old town area where the race starts and finishes. The island upon which Key West is located is so small that you will see practically half of its circumference while going out at the aqua blue sea as you run. In some years, the half marathon circumnavigates the entire island. You will pass white sandy beaches, leafy palm trees, and coral pines. The course is possible for, making it easy on your feet. After the run, head out to the Half Shell Raw Bar - one of the island's most popular seafood spots - and celebrate with oysters and a cocktail.

The author of the article, At These 14 Fantastic Destination 13.1-Milers, The Fun Starts At The Finish Line, debriefed race directors and veteran participants to come up with 14 prime destination races. The Key West Half Marathon once again secured the top spot!

“But what’s really cool is that you get to circumnavigate the island. It’s a whole tour.”

“There were 20 kegs of beer at last year’s postrace party at the Half Shell Raw Bar, and participants rave about the unique-to-Key West foods served, like chocolate-dipped Key lime pie on a stick.”

Key West may be known more for marathon drinking sessions than for running, but the town's half-marathon is trying to change all that—or at least combine the two. Starting in Old Town Key West, you'll pass Mallory Square, the Hemingway Home, and the famous Green Parrot Bar before embarking on a mostly coastal trek around the island.

(above), The event is especially known for its devoted—and spirited—volunteers, many of whom return yearly to support the 3,000-person race. “Snowbirds and retired military come down for this,” says race director Barbara Wright. “The water stops are great, a lot of the volunteers even dress up,” says Susan Burham, 55, of Fort Myers, Florida, who has done the race eight times. “But what’s really cool is that you get to circumnavigate the island. It’s a whole tour.” There were 20 kegs of beer at last year’s postrace party at the Half Shell Raw Bar, and participants rave about the unique-to-Key West foods served, like chocolate-dipped Key lime pie on a stick. Veteran Racer’s Tip “Plan to stay in Key West a few days, but don’t come too many days before since you may be tempted to party too much,” says Burham. Also note: Race weekend is an Martin Luther King Weekend, so hotels generally fill up fast. Don’t Leave Key West Without Starting your postrace party with a margarita at Shoppie Joe’s, one of Key West’s most famous bars—it’s on the National Register of Historic Places. Finish the night like a local at the Green Parrot with a “Roast Beer Barrel,” a roast-beer schnapps shot dropped into a beer. keywesthalfmarathon.com
